

TEMPLON

MARTIAL RAYSSE

CULTURED MAG, March 2 2026

In Paris for Fashion Week? Catch These 11 Must-See Exhibitions While You're There

Take a break from the fashion circuit with Pop Art, porous sculptures, and resurrected mid-century studios.

Over the next nine days, Paris Fashion Week will draw the usual crowds to see sartorial heavyweights unveil their latest collections. For those looking to take a break from the commotion, there's always the city's galleries and museums. The crop of shows on view around Paris this March promise to transport you everywhere from Joseph Cornell's home-studio (by way of Wes Anderson's mind) to a high-octane tour through our warming world via the caustic lens of the late Martin Parr.

Martial Raysse, Temps couvert à Tanger, 2014. Image courtesy of the artist and Templon.

“Recent Paintings” by Martial Raysse

Where: Templon

When: Through March 14

Why It's Worth a Look: In his first show for Templon, the reclusive 89-year-old legend of French post-war art will display nearly 30 works from the last decade. This includes his monumental pair of canvases La Peur (Fear) and La Paix (Peace), both completed in 2023. La Peur, with its leaden hues and fire-and-brimstone subject matter recalls his childhood in which the Gestapo targeted his father, a member of the French Resistance during Nazi occupation. (Upon its completion, Raysse dedicated the painting to those affected by the war in Ukraine.)

Know Before You Go: Templon, which recently expanded with its first gallery in New York, was founded in 1966, the same year that Raysse was chosen to represent France at the Venice Biennale.